It is intended to be a replacement of the default file manager in KDE (Fortuna), but is used alone if that is not possible. Dragonfly Navigator Features Drag and drop Drag and drop is simply a new way to navigate through your file system. With a simple drag & drop of files or folders, you can move them in the folder hierarchy. Just place the mouse on top of the file or folder you want to move and hold the left mouse button down. A context menu will appear that you can use to move or copy the files. Drag'n'drop technology is not always installed in all Windows programs. However, most modern web browsers and media players can support this (e.g. Windows 7, Linux Firefox 2 or higher). Keyboard shortcuts There are four standard keyboard shortcuts available. To open the file manager, press the key. To go to the first parent folder, press the key. To go to the last parent folder, press the key. To switch between files, press the key or key (the key you usually use for scrolling through your web browser). Query features Before you open a file or folder, a simple search bar is shown. In the search bar, you can easily search for a file or folder. For searching, use the "/" character to indicate the beginning of a word. Advanced searching There are several new advanced search features. For example, you can search for all files that end with a certain extension. You can use regular expressions for advanced searching as well. For example, you can search for all files that contain "stuff" and "batteries". Support for FTP and HTTP Dragonfly Navigator supports FTP and HTTP. The FTP protocol was very widely used in the past. While the HTTP protocol is the most common, there is a weakness with the FTP protocol (but not with HTTP).
